PHOTO GALLERY OF THE MONTH

Humpbacks, sea otters, bald eagles and many other critters live in and around Prince William Sound and other regions affected by the Exxon Valdez oil spill. See close-ups of mussels, moose, and even a copepod in our Animal Photo Gallery.

Also, we've added a links section to our Photo Gallery showcasing other online photo galleries that show pictures of council-related activities or that feature oil spill prevention and response issues. If you or anyone you know posts similar galleries on the Internet, email our webmaster.

DID YOU KNOW?

Cordova has a Ridicule Pole. You can see a picture of this special kind of totem pole carved by Mike Webber in response to the Exxon Valdez oil spill, and learn more about Cordova on our Community Spotlight web page.

COUNCIL NEWS

- We currently have two positions open: Administrative Assistant and Project Manager for Maritime Operations. Both are located in our Valdez office. For details, see our online employment page.

- As part of the regular review process, the Prince William Sound Tanker Contingency Plan and the SERVS Technical Manual are available for public comment (links take you to our Contingency Planning web page, from where you can download these large documents). Requests for additional information are due by 4:30pm on July 23, and final comments are due by 4:30pm on July 28. Submit comments to John Kotula (john.kotula@alaska.gov) at the Alaska Dept. of Environmental Conservation.

Q&A

Q: Is there a list somewhere of all the council's reports?

A: Visit Reports and Documents Available on This Web Site to see a list of council reports published in the past few years. Browse categories to find hundreds of documents, or contact either of our offices with questions.
